Since 1925, the National Palace Museum (NPM) has been the world's premier center for exhibiting Chinese art and culture and for the research, conservation, and cultural-creative innovation of Chinese art and cultural artifacts. The National Palace Museum has nearly 700,000 treasured pieces of culture and history in its permanent collection, reflecting the essence and highest achievements of imperial art across more than a thousand years. With the largest collection of Chinese art and artifacts in the world, the NPM is truly a 'treasure house' of Chinese heritage. The museum offers expertly led tours in many languages, including sign language. The NPM's traditional palace-style architecture and traditional gardens also add immeasurably to each visit experience.

The community of Bopiliao was established in the 18th century during the early Qing Dynasty. Since then, the area has evolved with Taiwan through the Qing Dynasty, Japanese Colonial Period (1895-1945), and early postwar period. Situated in Mengjia (aka Monga, Bangka), one of early Taipei's most prosperous districts, the architecture here reflects vividly the island's changing cultural and political influences. The area is uniquely representative of the once-flourishing Mengjia district.

The minimalist design of Taipei Impression Hall (1st floor) focuses attention on the city's many cultural heritage sites. The multimedia screen on the main wall and floor projections highlight Taipei's vibrant diversity and vigor.

Although small in size, the Special Exhibitions Hall (2nd floor) holds a regular calendar of exhibitions spotlighting important aspects of the city.

City Discovery Hall (3rd floor) welcomes visitors to indulge their imaginations in displays showing how Taipei's city landscape has evolved over the decades and centuries.

Dialogue with Time Hall (4th floor) presents the city's development and evolution over time and shows how different eras have left their distinctive marks on the modern city.

Discovery Theater's 360-degree immersive theater experience delivers a regular rotation of four films, including The Occurrence of Taipei, Yeah! Taipei, Fascinating Taipei, and Moments in Taipei. The films, suitable for all ages, guide viewers through some of Taipei City's countless stories.

Taipei Children's Amusement Park began life as the Taipei Children's Recreation Center across the river from the Grand Hotel. The need for expansion and new government restrictions on its former site, led to the decision to relocate the Park to its new, more-spacious site in the city's Shilin District. The Park, which is jam packed with rides and activities for children and their parents to enjoy, is within easy walking distance of several city parks as well as the Astronomical Museum and National Science Education Center.

As recently as 5,000 years ago, much of what is now Taipei City was covered by a large lake. For millions of years, this area was populated with fish. The gradual push and pull of plate tectonics finally opened Taipei Basin to the sea, transforming the lake into dry land. To commemorate the city's watery heritage, an ecological lake lively with ducks, turtles, egrets, and other water life graces the park's main entrance. The endangered paradise fish (Marcopodus opercularis Ahl) can be seen here as well. Zhishan Cultural and Ecological Garden opened as Taiwan's first ecological park and, according to its Director, is "like a living fossil, with traces of creatures that lived here many years ago. We try to represent the rich local geological system by growing coastal, marshland and inland plant species. This is the only place in Taipei Basin where you can see such important geological features."
